PROGRAMME SPECIFIC OUTCOME (PSO) :

h The M.A. programme in History is designed to foster a research-oriented, interdisciplinary, and skill-enriched academic environment. It aims to develop historically grounded, socially responsible, and technologically adept graduates equipped to address both regional and global challenges. Upon completion, students will demonstrate the following competencies:

1: Disciplinary Knowledge

a Students will develop a comprehensive and critical understanding of historical processes across temporal and spatial scales, with emphasis on India and Jammu & Kashmir. They will be able to engage with diverse themes such as political evolution, social transformation, economic systems, cultural expressions, and environmental change.

2: Research, Inquiry, and Innovation

/ Students will be equipped to identify research problems, formulate hypotheses, and employ historical methods to conduct independent research using primary and secondary sources. They will be trained in historiographical analysis, source criticism, and interdisciplinary perspectives, preparing them for doctoral studies and research professions.

3: ICT and Digital Literacy in History

b Students will integrate digital tools and ICT platforms into historical research and learning. This includes familiarity with digital archives, database management, GIS and historical mapping, data visualization, and basic digital humanities tools. They will critically evaluate digital content and apply ICT in both academic and public history contexts.

4: Critical Thinking and Analytical Reasoning

k Students will cultivate analytical thinking through the evaluation of complex historical narratives, detection of bias, comparative analysis, and interpretation of diverse historiographical traditions. This skill will enable them to challenge dominant discourses and construct well-reasoned historical arguments.

ds mnd

5: Effective Communication

Students will acquire the ability to articulate historical knowledge clearly through academic writing, oral presentations, and digital storytelling. They will be capable of translating scholarly insights into formats suitable for public discourse, policy advocacy, and cultural preservation.

6: Regional Heritage and Indian Knowledge Systems (IKS)

Students will engage with regional histories and local knowledge systems, particularly the cultural, political, and environmental history of Jammu and Kashmir. They will explore indigenous historiographies, oral traditions, and regional archives, contributing to the decolonization of historical narratives.

7: Ethical Reasoning and National Commitment

Students will develop ethical awareness in historical scholarship, including respect for diverse perspectives, responsible use of sources, and integrity in research. They will also cultivate a sense of civic responsibility and national commitment rooted in the values of India's constitutional and civilizational ethos.

8: Life-long Learning and Employability

The programme nurtures life-long learning habits through research projects, field work, archival immersion, and seminar presentations. It also imparts transferable skills—critical reading, analytical writing, public engagement—that prepare students for careers in academia, civil services, journalism, heritage management, and cultural industries.

COURSE SPECIFIC OUTCOME (CSO) : The Course Specific Outcome is mentioned with detailed syllabus of each course.

Course Objectives:

This course explores the layered and dynamic nature of historical knowledge through a critical engagement with the sources that shape our understanding of India's past. Emphasizing both breadth and depth, students will examine textual, material, oral, and visual evidence with a methodological toolkit that supports nuanced historical interpretation. A special focus on the Jammu & Kashmir region offers an in-depth case study in how regional narratives intersect with broader national and sub-continental histories.

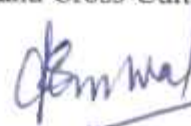

Through diverse source materials—ranging from ancient inscriptions and classical texts to royal chronicles, folk traditions, and visual media—students will learn to assess authenticity, bias, and context in historical construction. The course encourages the cultivation of historical reasoning, interpretive sensitivity, and methodological rigor, fostering a deeper appreciation for the craft of history.

Unit I: Foundations of Historical Inquiry

1. Defining Historical Sources: Nature, Scope, and Challenges
2. Typology and Classification: Textual, Material, Oral, and Visual Sources
3. Ethnographic Data and its Relevance to Historical Analysis
4. Historiography: Key Debates, Methodologies, and Shifts in Historical Thought
